The year has opened on a flat note for the portfolio, which lagged the Norwegian market in January. We have only just begun to receive fourth-quarter reports, and the initial readings are encouraging.

Among our savings banks, both Sparebanken Møre and Sparebanken Norge have delivered strong updates. Sparebanken Møre generated a return on equity of more than 14%, albeit helped somewhat by reversals of previous loan-loss provisions. It is also pleasing to see costs decline from the previous quarter. Sparebanken Norge delivered a return on equity of just under 14%, comfortably ahead of its 13% target. Operations at Sparebanken Norge remain very solid, and even with the additional costs related to the merger with Sparebanken Sør, the bank is still running at a respectable cost ratio of 33%.

Both banks have proposed generous dividends to the community and to their equity certificate holders. Based on current valuations, this equates to a dividend yield of roughly 6.5% for both institutions – a healthy base return before any growth is added.

Elsewhere, both TGS and Kid have provided quarterly updates. TGS released only an operational report, covering fleet utilisation and investments in the multi-client library. The market received the report well. Fleet utilisation came in at 78%, slightly ahead of expectations, while investments landed as anticipated at $120 million. Sometimes no big surprises are good news, and the share price reaction reflects the somewhat negative sentiment currently surrounding TGS.

For Kid, sales figures came in a touch below expectations, driven by Swedish subsidiary Hemtex, which faced a tough comparison with the same quarter last year. In Norway, revenues rose by more than 4%, which must be considered a respectable level of growth. Temporary issues related to the transition to the new warehouse have weighed on sales into 2025. This should now be behind us (knock on wood), and looking ahead, the roughly 50% increase in warehouse capacity should support Kid's long-term growth journey. Provided the targets for store numbers and store size are reached around 2030, it is reasonable to project annual growth of 8–10%. As this growth requires little capital, a large share of profits can be paid out as dividends, supporting attractive long-term returns for us as shareholders.

Looking at the portfolio as a whole, there is no slowdown in growth. If we rely on consensus estimates for the next two years, the current portfolio is on track to an earnings growth of around 12% per year. Combined with an expected dividend yield of around 5%, this indicates continued strong return potential.

The portfolio is currently priced at around 10 times this year's earnings, equivalent to an earnings yield of 10%. Measured against a ten-year government bond yield of around 4%, this implies a solid margin of safety.
