The President of the United States certainly had another busy month, once again orchestrating volatility in financial markets. The month began with the strike on Venezuela, culminating in the capture of President Nicolás Maduro. Following the success of the operation, Trump turned his attention to Greenland, adopting a more forceful tone than before in his claim on the island. He stated that the United States needed to gain control of Greenland and would do so “one way or another”.

These remarks provoked strong reactions from European leaders, and tensions intensified further when Trump announced that additional tariffs would be imposed on several European countries until an agreement on Greenland was reached. The escalation triggered a sell-off in risk assets. However, President Trump once again demonstrated that his threats seldom come into force. During his speech at the economic forum in Davos, he softened his tone and assured that the US wouldn’t use force to acquire Greenland. Shortly thereafter, the tariff threats were also withdrawn following discussions with European leaders, including NATO Secretary General Mark Rutte. Trump stated that a framework agreement on Greenland had been reached, one that did not involve US ownership. Markets rebounded after the constructive development.

Tensions are also mounting in Iran, where protests against the regime have intensified and mass casualties have been reported. The United States has deployed an aircraft carrier strike group to the region, prompting questions about the potential for deeper US involvement.

Despite geopolitical tensions, Pareto ESG Global Corporate Bond delivered a strong performance during the month. Performance exceeded the fund’s running yield, primarily driven by tighter credit spreads in general and some single names performing on company-specific news.

Bonds issued by women’s health company Organon rallied during the month following rumours of a potential buyout bid from India-based Sun Pharma, an event that would trigger the bonds’ change-of-control covenant. Our 2034 bond initially gained around 10% on the news. Transport company Mobico also delivered a strong performance after reports that it is in late-stage negotiations with German public transport authorities regarding its onerous rail transport contracts. Both issuers were among the largest detractors to last year’s performance. We have remained confident in the underlying credit quality of these companies and are pleased that this is now paying off.

We participated in two new issues during the month: a refinancing transaction from Belden and a debut bond offering from MKS Inc., issuing €1 billion with an 8-year maturity. Founded in 1965, MKS is a US-based company specialising in critical subsystems and process control solutions for semiconductor equipment OEMs. In recent years, the company has successfully diversified beyond the semiconductor sector by leveraging its deep R&D capabilities and precision process expertise to expand into industrial and life-science end markets. Today, more than 50% of revenues are generated outside the cyclical semiconductor industry, while over 40% stem from consumables and services. The company has a solid track record with a sound financial policy and robust cash flow generation, also proven in cyclical downturns.
